Safeguarding Children who are Victims of Domestic Abuse

25 - 29 November 2024

The National Child Safeguarding Practice Review Panel's briefing, Multi-agency safeguarding and domestic abuse, outlines four core practice principles that should guide our work with children and young people, their parents, wider families and networks in relation to domestic abuse. These principles offer a shared approach to inform practice and should be viewed as interconnected and interdependent.

This 2022 briefing paper from the National Child Safeguarding Practice Review Panel, sets out key findings from a thematic analysis of rapid reviews and local child safeguarding practice reviews where domestic abuse featured. It summarises the most common themes that emerged in relation to multi-agency safeguarding for children who are victims of domestic abuse, and includes examples of practice and recommendations.

CORE PRACTICE PRINCIPLES

Consider your practice in this area against these four key criteria. Is your practice:

1. Domestic abuse-informed?
2. Trauma-informed?
3. Taking a whole family approach?
4. Intersectional?
